Zinc oxide nanoparticles (ZnO NPs) are nanoscale materials that have potential applications in different fields due to their unique physicochemical properties. The presence of ZnO NPs in the environment will inevitably lead to interactions between their surfaces and living organisms. In this study, the effects of surface chemistry of ZnO NPs on the integrity of biomembrane have been investigated through the study of liposome membranes as a model of cell membranes. The lipid monolayers and ZnO NPs were supported on monolayer of POPC. The physico-chemical properties of the supported monolayers were studied by monitoring the changes in the surface pressure-area isotherms and the fluorescence intensity of lipid molecules. Results indicated that the surface chemistry of ZnO NPs markedly affected the lipid packing of the membrane surface and the interaction between the ZnO NPs and lipid molecules. The interplay of surface chemistry and surface free energy of ZnO NPs gave rise to the different effects on the membrane. Based on the above results, it was found that the interaction mechanism of the surface free energy of ZnO NPs and the lipid molecules is a combination of the excluded volume effect and the non-polar area effect.Q: why my regex is not working for the below regex?
