If there are tax refunds, those funds will be disbursed to the state's general fund, Harris said. "Chevron will pay up for using tax shelters to hide profits," she said in a statement. "We all end up paying when companies use these special tax schemes to avoid paying their fair share." The settlement stems from an investigation the Attorney General's Office launched in 2011 into Chevron's use of the 21% "quick refund" program it receives every quarter. Chevron had been disputing the findings of the investigation for more than a year, the state said. "Chevron engaged in a pattern of deception over the years with the California Air Resources Board and the Department of Tax and Fee Administration," according to the settlement, which was signed on behalf of the Attorney General's Office, the Department of Tax and Fee Administration and the California Air Resources Board. "At all times, Chevron had the ability to capture the full 21% refund. Yet, through a series of fraudulent maneuvers, Chevron did not capture all of the refund money it was due for the quarter," according to the settlement, which also calls for Chevron to pay $158,913 for investigative costs. During the investigation, "Chevron falsely certified under oath that it was making all its required payments to the tax authorities in full for the quarter," the Attorney General's Office said. "Chevron engaged in a fraudulent 04aeff104c
