I have a string like "gData[0][1]=1, gData[0][0]=0". How can I convert it into something like ("gData":{"[0][1]":1,"[0][0]":0}) in JavaScript? A: Assuming gData is an array (after the var statement), try this: var obj = {}; obj[gData[0][0]] = gData[0][1]; This will have an object with gData[0][0] equal to 1, and gData[0][1] equal to 0. Q: Synchronized thread locking I was just doing some reading and found this: Threads generally provide an atomic property. If two threads simultaneously access a variable using a synchronized block, then only one thread can access the variable. If the other thread has the lock, then its modification will be ignored. Is the following code an example of something the writer of the page I was reading was talking about? public class MyClass { protected void doStuff() { synchronized (this) { if (exists) { ... }
