Building stock-media libraries is a popular, easy way to share critical assets. Now we're expanding on our current built-in solutions that allow you to upload and share PNG and JPG files via Google Drive or Sharepoint, as well as a cloud-ready JPEG or TIFF version that you can download for local use. More than just a place for storing your files, a Photoshop library is also a convenient asset-management tool. It lets you organize and share the images you use frequently, like logos, business-card designs, and vehicle interiors. In addition to simplified access from File Explorer and the New menu, there are new organization features that make it easier for you to manage your images through a simple library tab. With Live Grid, you can help speed up image prioritization by automatically highlighting which of your images are most likely to be used. The new Libraries tool makes it easier to organize your media collections. From the Libraries button you can open your library, browse your folders for images and use filters and effects to organize them any way you'd like. You can even create a master collection for you to share with other designers by using an existing folder and giving it a name. Once you're ready to share a library, you can publish it as an online album or download a link that you can share with anyone. And now you can add custom-drawn progress indicators to the bottom of your albums. Once you've created a Photoshop document from your images—whether from a camera, scanner, smartphone, or website—you'll probably want to reposition, crop, and edit them as you work on them. And of course you need to share your final work with colleagues, clients, or other project stakeholders.

The creative automotive industry is one of the world's most demanding and high-paced innovation-driven industries. It's crammed full of incredible stories of fantastic stories of people who dream up, build and sell some of the coolest cars the world has ever seen, and that's why we're particularly excited to announce that Photoshop & Creative Cloud customers will have access to a catalog of 42 original automotive and creative content assets, ready to be replaced with their own car designs. As the world's image editing and creative software king, Adobe obviously has some of the best data in the industry. So what does this tell us? We think it is safe to say that Photoshop users will typically be digital artists, whose work spans across multiple devices - from desktop pc to smartphones, tablets and more. And our numbers back up our ideas - with 84% of users being creative professionals. The second thing we do know is that nearly two-thirds of users are in the field of fashion design. With the availability of new and exciting design projects - offering amazing, new visual possibilities and broader design portfolios - around 5.6 million people will be able to create content without leaving Photoshop. As well as 4.4 million creative professionals in the field of photography, we're also seeing a significant increase in the number of designers using Photoshop for design content creation. Preorderers in the automotive and fashion design will be unique to the industry. And in some instances, designers in those areas will be creating 2,600 stock photos/assets a month, for example, for use in car design and fashion portfolios. So while 'stock photography' is a popular topic on its own, having robust and universal design and automotive content assets has never been more important.
