Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to a power supply apparatus having a safety circuit for ensuring safety at the time of fault of a power supply line. More specifically, the invention relates to a power supply apparatus for a flat panel display device such as a plasma display panel, a plasma address liquid crystal panel, or a plasma address liquid crystal panel, which has a power supply circuit for supplying power to the panel from a commercial power source. 2. Description of the Related Art As a power supply apparatus of the above-described type, there is known an apparatus which has a constant voltage circuit for step-down-converting a voltage of a power source line and supplying the resulting constant voltage to the panel. According to this apparatus, when a fault occurs in the power source line, a power source circuit for supplying power to the panel from the power source line is automatically switched over to a secondary battery. As one example of the secondary battery, there is known a secondary battery having a lower discharge characteristic than the power source line. Such a secondary battery is used as a power supply circuit for supplying power to the panel. However, when a power source circuit for supplying power to the panel is switched over to the secondary battery, the terminal voltage of the panel becomes unstable, causing a problem in that the panel cannot be operated. A method may be considered to solve the above problem. In this method, a voltage of the power source line is step-down-converted at a constant rate by a constant voltage circuit and then supplied to the panel. In this case, when a fault occurs in the power source line, the power source circuit is automatically switched over to the secondary battery. This allows the secondary battery to supply power continuously to the panel. However, when the power source circuit is switched over to the secondary battery at the constant rate, the terminal voltage of the panel becomes unstable. This causes a problem in that a constant voltage circuit should be arranged for every power supply circuit. Further, if a fault occurs in the secondary battery, an operation of the power supply circuit is interrupted. This causes a problem in that the panel cannot be operated.Redox-responsive biodegradable poly(am
