I think of this as Kiely's biggest contribution to the field of photography. Golden Rule of Photography: Supporting the right thing will create loyal followers. Both the smart-dial camera companies like Nikon are obsessed with low light and with their new D4, Nikon has the technology to deliver the capability that is promised by many pundits about the new D4. But if you are a Nikon owner and you are still obsessing over legacy D2/Ti crap you are missing the boat and will miss the next Nikon D4. What an excellent post. Sorry (a little bit) about the length. There are a million ways to skin a cat, right? Ruffght. I like being able to use my RAW files in different sorts of programs without making hard compromises. I would be perfectly happy to continue to use RAW files in Lightroom and only use JPEGS for the living pictures. An easy way to export slides from Lightroom as jpeg would be nice. I mostly use Lightroom to batch process slides, align them, grade them, adjust colors, adjust curves, export to tif, etc (like V1 did). In other words, the raw files are only used when things go really wrong. For example, you probably won't want to use the color balance tool with a slide, unless you are going to make radical color corrections to it.

Adobe Photoshop CC 2014 is here and has some amazing new features. It has the new browser compatibility: Full-screen mode now has the same look and feel as the rest of Photoshop. In full-screen mode, the menus and toolbar appear at the top of your image. If you use the scrollbar on the right side of your image window, you can scroll left or right in any window size that's currently active. New Photoshop CC features include: The Grid tool, Camera Raw, Smart Filter, Brush tools, Layer styles, Mask tools, Lens Blur, and more. While most artists and designers were eager to get their hands on free Photoshop CS6 software, they generally downplayed the excitement over this deal, all the more so when the trial period was supposedly only lasting a few months. But when the trial period is over, they will have to pay $10 per month for the privilege of using it, or they can purchase the full commercial app for $20. But wait – it gets even better than that. In an effort to encourage parsimony among Photoshop users, the softwaremakers were more than generous with those who downloaded Photoshop CS6 prior to November 9th: they gave away a lifetime license for the app and two additional years of subscription to Adobe's Creative Cloud. After that, the freebies expire on December 9th.
